

Synchronicity Log/Proving God #2

March 27, 2006

My idea is to provide you with short, straight to the point examples/reminders of what happens when you intend/pray something and then let go. Do not be off-put by the word God. This is the word many people use to signify their idea of spirit, and that is how it is intended here.

Don't buy into the world and its appearances.

As the starter waves the green flag, signaling Go, Go, Go! I mash the accelerator to the floor. I am bumper to bumper with the guy in front of me going into turn one, all of a sudden he is spinning in front of me. Without time to brake, I turn inside of him and keep the accelerator down, hoping I can clear him before he spins into me. As I pass him, some part of his out of control race car clips my right, rear quarter panel, and unbeknownst to me, shreds my right rear tire. Also unbeknownst to me the yellow flag has been shown, signaling caution on the track, and to slow down. As I hit turns 3 and 4, the rear end of my race car feels like mush, as I cruise by the crowded grandstand, I look to see if anyone is indicating anything is wrong with my car. I see nothing. Finally they bring us all to a halt, and send me off the track because of my shredded tire.

As I pull into the pits I am disappointed because I think my race day is over.

But wait! A miracle! 2 friends are waiting there to change my tire for me. At least I will be able to complete the race, even though I'll be laps down. By the way, I don't have a spare since one of the tires popped while I was towing the car to the track this morning, and somehow they "borrowed one" from somewhere else! Another miracle.

As they are changing the tire, one of them is yelling at me, (he has to yell because the noise is deafening), "There is a wreck on the track and the tow truck is being called!" Well this has to mean miracle number 3 because now we have time to change the tire and get back out there and stay on the first lap.

And sure enough, as the field of cars is pulling past heading for what now will be the third green flag, they wave me back out on to the track at the end of the line, meaning I will restart the race with everyone else!

So what's the point? Well for me the point is: do not buy into appearances. Often the appearances of adversity set us back light years because we put so much energy into them, instead of keeping our energy going toward the ultimate goal. In other words, build the trust that the outcome is assured, despite how the "world" appears.

Another example of how this worked this past week: I was checking on some insulation work that was supposed to have been done before all the drywall was installed in our new house. I discovered that they had not apparently followed through on what they said. This angered me greatly. I was incensed. How could this be happening to me? When I calmed down, I emailed her and stated that the work hadn't been done. She replied, quite patiently I might add, that "The insulation will be blown into the ceiling through little holes in the drywall, which are easily patched."

And here I was sure that the intended peace of my life had been rudely interrupted, again!

Since we are connected to God/Spirit, or as my Hawaiian Kupunas teach, we are God/Spirit, we cannot fail. The outcome is assured. I am encouraging you to live this way. Develop the trust and wisdom to live your dreams now, not after you have everything in place. Ask yourself, "If you knew you could not fail, what would you do?"

Oh, and by the way, after starting last, I managed to finish third, an amazing feat considering...
